AGRICULTURE

Livestock Management | Crop Management

Indiana's agriculture industry is high-growth and high-tech, with science and technology playing a role in almost every phase of agricultural production. Changes in the technology and business of agriculture have tremendous potential for our economy, the environment and your future. High-tech intensive crop and livestock techniques, biofuels, seed genetics, precision ag technology, and sophisticated marketing and research activities all require educated, well-trained workers.

CROP MANAGEMENT

Our state is well-known for corn and soybeans, but changing technology is broadening the scope of crop management in Indiana. In this concentration, students will study the science behind crop management, learn how to maximize profit and production, adapt to changing environmental conditions, and use new technology in agronomic row crop management. Career opportunities include fertilizer and pesticide applicators, see agronomist, precision agriculture technicians, seed research technicians and home farm operators.

LIVESTOCK MANAGEMENT

The livestock industry is ever-changing and offers a wide variety of career opportunities. The Livestock Management concentration helps prepare students for these opportunities through coursework in animal physiology and nutrition, housing facilities, waste management, herd management, and marketing techniques to maximize productivity of a livestock herd or poultry flock. Positions in the livestock industry include herd/flock manager, feed/supply sales, veterinarian technician, meat inspector, or animal breeder.
